Holiday Tradition Returns to the National Infantry Museum

Polar Express Conductor gives moviegoers a personal experience

Columbus, Georgia – December 3, 2014 The Polar Express 3D is returning to the IMAX Theatre at the National Infantry Museum for weekend screenings in November and December.

Kids (and parents, too!) are encouraged to wear their pajamas for the magical journey to the North Pole to find the true spirit of Christmas. All ticket holders who wear their pajamas to the movie will receive a free cup of hot chocolate at the concessions stand! And children will be allowed to pull a jingle bell from Santa's bag. If it's gold, they'll take home a hardback copy of the children's book of the same title written by Chris Van Allsburg.

Once again, longtime National Infantry Museum volunteer and docent Owen Ditchfield will reprise his role as the movie's train conductor. He allows youngsters to hold his lantern while he punches their initials in their Golden Tickets.

This year's schedule for The Polar Express 3D is as follows:

Friday 11/28, Saturday 11/29 and Sunday 11/30

4:00 pm and 6:30 pm
